

Bio:

It is as a photographer that I have navigated my way through the world. Introduced to the work of Robert Frank and Diane Arbus in 1973 while a graduate student in political science, I dropped out of the political science program and devoted myself exclusively to photography with no thoughts as to how I might make it work. I eventually found my way to the San Francisco Art Institute and a few years later was further influenced by meeting Robert Heinecken and seeing his work. By 1978 I was in the graduate photography program at the University of New Mexico, earning an M.A and an M.F.A. Since then, I have often ended up in atypical professional paths. Over the years I have worked in commercial printing, been an art director for an upscale clothier, a graphic designer, an art director and production manager for a horse magazine, taught Graphic Design at the University of Idaho and at Boise State University, and taught Photography at Purdue University. Several years after leaving academia, I stopped showing work for twenty years but made tens of thousands of photographs during that time and certainly had time to think about what was worth my life energy. Like they say, it was a bit like riding a bicycle when I returned once more to making finished pieces. Plus, I felt like I still had photo theory problems to solve and some statements to make. My wife Nan and I share a straw bale house in a rocky canyon four miles up from the Snake River Plain in South Central Idaho, along with horses, dogs, cats, goats and occasional grandchildren and great grandchildren.
